Summary

As a Regional Medical Lead, you'll drive medical strategy, evidence generation, and cross-functional collaboration to improve patient access and outcomes. Your expertise will shape clinical development and ensure innovative therapies reach those who need them most.

About the Role

Key Responsibilities

- Lead the development and execution of local medical strategies aligned with global and franchise objectives.
- Identify strategic drivers and shape the patient journey and stakeholder engagement plans.
- Co-develop integrated evidence plans and oversee local execution across the product lifecycle.
- Drive real-world evidence generation and support innovative study designs to improve patient outcomes.
- Provide expert medical input on pipeline programs, disease areas, and approved brands.
- Collaborate cross-functionally to ensure compliant and impactful medical and promotional activities.
- Represent Novartis in scientific forums, publications, and external stakeholder engagements.
- Support training, regulatory submissions, and governance of external funding and patient programs.

Role Requirements

- Advanced degree in health sciences (MBBS, MD, BDS, PhD, or PharmD) as per local regulations.
- Minimum 1–2 years of experience in the pharmaceutical industry.
- Strong clinical and research background with knowledge of Good Clinical Practice.
- Proven ability to translate scientific knowledge into strategic medical plans.
- Excellent communication, collaboration, and stakeholder engagement skills.
- Strong planning, organizational, and scientific writing capabilities.
- Fluency in English; proficiency in local language preferred.

Desirable Requirements

- Experience with innovative study designs such as randomized controlled trials combined with real-world evidence.
- Proven track record of co-creating and executing protocols with healthcare system stakeholders.
